Lord Beaverbrook arrived in the city vesterday from Canada and is at the leaders resort to violence when he is President they need not fear his use of the United States troops to suppress it. Governor Cox's record as Governor in suppressing disorder beyond the control of the local authorities has been one of shifting responsibility to the mayors and charging them with dereliction of duty in not using local police.

Attacked National Guard

When Mr. Cox was first nominated for Governor in 1912 his most urgent supporter was Herbert S. Bigelow, of Cincinnati, an extreme pacifist, a Socialist and a Democrat who was the president of the Constitutional Convention. Mr. Cox and Mr. Bigelow stumped the state together in the guernatorial campaign, and were en-

Attitude of Governor Cox

By William Howard Taft
The so-called independents, who, assuming the part of judicial inquiry into issues and candidates, usually end by voting the Democratic ticket, have framed a character for Governor Cox which Ohioans are not able to identify. They attack Senator Harding as a man of no convictions, and contrast Governor Cox as a fearless statesman, who says what he thinks crearly and with emphasis.

right of the employer to conduct his business.

He favors voluntary arbitration and mutual understanding, but he insists that in a matter if which the public is witally interested, like interstate commerce, the public has rights against employer and employee, and should be protected from great suffering by arbitrating the differences, as in the Esch-Cummings law he voted to make a combination to stop interstate commerce in such a controversy an offense against the United States and defended it in a letter to the labor unions of Ohio.
